Sikkens RIJKS Colors

Colors from the Rijksmuseum

When Amsterdam's famous Rijksmuseum wanted to recreate the colors used by architect Pierre Cuypers in the 1880s, they turned to AkzoNobel.

Experts at our Sikkens brand – official supplier of all paint and decorative products to the museum – composed a palette of more than 60 colors which were used to faithfully return the interior to its former glory.

The color palette was developed together with experts from the Limburg Conservation Institute. Once Sikkens had mixed the colors, the paint was used to restore the Cuypers decorations on the walls of the museum. The original decor has been best preserved in the library, which has faithfully retained most of its original features.

In total, more than 8,000 liters of Sikkens has been used through the building, both inside and out. The new grey tones, developed together with the architects of the Rijksmuseum, and the Cuypers colors have now been brought together to create the Sikkens RIJKS Colors collection.

The samples in this brochure are identical to the colors that have been applied in the Rijksmuseum. However, please note that printed colors sometimes deviate from the original, so they may appear slightly different on paper. Color differences can also be caused by extensive use or exposure to light. Therefore, we advise you to always test the colors next to a Sikkens RIJKS Colors fan or in a Sikkens Center.
